A Reflection of the Gospel from Living Liturgy

2017: In John's gospel Pentecost takes place on Easter evening. The giving of new Life on Easter and the giving of the Spirit on Pentecost coalesce in the one Body of Christ, the church. This Body is filled with the joy of divine Presence, the grace of risen peace, the eagerness of being sent forth, the breath of new creation, the power of forgiveness. Each day when we—Christ's Body, the church—allow the Holy Spirit to work in and through us, Easter-Pentecost happens anew.

Being the risen Christ's Body, the church, means that our new Life in the Spirit binds us into a community. But, alas, sometimes we do not live in accordance with the identity we've been given. No wonder Jesus links the sending of the Spirit with the commission to forgive sins! Forgiveness heals the breach between two persons or groups, heals the divergence of lives, ensures that we remain "one body" in Christ. The only way we can share risen Life is that there be no breach among us "whether Jews or Greeks, slaves or free persons". Forgiveness, then, stands as a bounden duty for those sharing in risen Life. This forgiveness is about building right relationships, about opening doors between ourselves and others rather than closing them, about allowing the peace of Christ to replace the fears that stifle our connecting to one another. The risen Christ breathes into us the Spirit—this capacity to be new creations who forgive—then sends us out into the world to unleash this Spirit. Every day is an Easter-Pentecost.
